2. EXPLAIN CHANGE TO DEGREE PROGRAM AND GIVE A DETAILED RATIONALE FOR EACH INDIVIDUAL CHANGE:

The primary educational objective of this new degree program—a Bachelor of Arts degree in Human Dimensions of Organizations—is to teach undergraduates to explore, learn, and articulate the ways the liberal arts and social/behavioral sciences can address practical problems facing organizations. These disciplines are key to fully analyzing various challenges that arise from the people and cultures influencing an organization internally and externally. Elements such as workplace culture, innovative thinking, communication, qualitative reasoning, quantitative analysis, are crucial to the healthy operation of any business or nonprofit. Likewise, external forces such as globalization, regulations, linguistic diversity, cultural differences shape an organization and its workers. The disciplines of the humanities and social and behavioral sciences are well suited to provide insights into these types of complex problems, which undergraduates will face in the workplace.

This new BA degree will be granted by the College of Liberal Arts, so student advising will be provided through COLA as well. Unlike many new degree program proposals, this undergraduate degree proposal is preceded by a Master of Arts degree in HDO, which currently is welcoming its third cohort of graduate students. The proposed degree will be housed in the College of Liberais Arts’ Human Dimensions of Organizations program offices, out of which the Master of Arts degree is currently situated. HDO’s current faculty director is Psychology Professor Art Markman. While he will oversee both MA and BA degrees, an associate director (Amy Ware, staff) and an undergraduate advisor (John Traphagan, professor) will coordinate with faculty, departments, etc. The HDO undergraduate degree will be further shaped and overseen by an advisory committee that includes faculty.

HDO will offer three required courses related specifically to the roles of the social/behavioral sciences and the humanities in the workplace. These courses include:

HDO 301: Introduction to the Human Dimensions of Organizations
In this course, students are introduced to what organizations are and how the liberal arts can examine, analyze, and change them. The course will define an organization from a liberal arts standpoint; survey various approaches to understanding organizations, and explore career opportunities related to the human dimensions of organizations. This course will provide a series of demonstrations of ways that liberal arts disciplines can be used to provide insight into organizational problems.
HDO 320: Multidisciplinary Methods for Exploring Organizations
In this course, students will learn how to analyze and synthesize organizational studies from a liberal arts viewpoint. They will examine types of organizations, explore problems these organizations face, and consider the ways distinct methodologies might address these problems.

HDO 379: Applying the Human Dimensions of Organizations
In this course, students will engage in a connecting experience that allows them to apply the multidisciplinary methods of the Human Dimensions of Organizations with an external entity. These individual projects enable students to broaden their understanding of the role of the liberal arts viewpoint in practical settings.

HDO 359H and 379H: Honors Research in Human Dimensions of Organizations
Students in the honors track will complete an extended connecting experience that they develop in consultation with a member of the faculty. In this connecting experience, they will describe an organizational problem that they witnessed and do an extended thesis that uses one or more disciplines to provide insight into how this problem can be addressed. The program will culminate in a poster session in which honors students present their work to faculty and students.

HDO 301 is open to all undergraduates; other HDO-specific courses are restricted to majors.

In addition to the above courses, majors will be required to take 3 hours in (a) quantitative reasoning; (b) qualitative reasoning; (c) creativity and innovation; and (d) culture and communication. Each major must take an additional 9 hours in one of these topics. The HDO undergraduate advisor reviews all COLA courses and marks those that qualify for each focus area.
