

Sharon Bradford Franklin is Senior Counsel at The Constitution Project (“TCP”), a constitutional watchdog based in Washington, D.C. Her work focuses on TCP’s Rule of Law Program, which addresses issues of government secrecy, individual privacy, and detention policies, and advocates for protection both of Americans’ civil liberties as well as our nation’s security. Franklin’s recent work has included filing an amicus brief in the U.S. Supreme Court in the consolidated cases General Dynamics v. United States and Boeing v. United States, in which defense contractors challenge the U.S. government’s assertion of the state secrets privilege to block their defense in a government contracting dispute. Franklin previously served as a Trial Attorney with the Housing & Civil Enforcement Section of the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice, and as a Special Counsel handling civil rights policy issues in the Office of General Counsel at the Federal Communications Commission. She graduated from Harvard College and Yale Law School, and began her legal career as a law clerk to the Honorable Jane R. Roth, first in the U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware and then on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Lee Gelernt has been an attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union since 1992, and works on immigration and national security issues. He currently holds the positions of Deputy Director of the ACLU’s national Immigrants’ Rights Project, and Director of the Project’s Program on Access to the Courts. He has argued numerous groundbreaking civil rights cases at all levels of the federal court system, including in 2011 arguing the case of Ashcroft v. al-Kidd in the U.S. Supreme Court, challenging the constitutionality of the government’s post-9/11 policy of using the federal material witness statute to investigate and preventively detain terrorism suspects in cases where there was no probable cause to justify a criminal arrest. Gelernt is also an adjunct professor at Columbia Law School and a visiting lecturer in clinical law at Yale Law School. He is a graduate of Columbia Law School, and holds a M.Sc. in International Relations from the London School of Economics. Following law school, Gelernt served as a law clerk to the Honorable Frank M. Coffin of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.

Lisa Graybill is Legal Director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Texas, where she has served as counsel in numerous cases in Texas state and federal courts, including Doe v. Neveleff, a class action suit against federal, state, and private entities recently filed in the Western District of Texas on behalf of immigrant women who were sexually assaulted in detention, and In re Hutto Family Detention Center, a successful (settled) challenge to conditions in immigrant detention facility for families with children. Graybill began her legal career as a law clerk to the Honorable Stephen M. Orlofsky of the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey, and then joined the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice. She earned her B.A. from Smith College and her J.D. from the University of Texas School of Law.

Jim Harrington, a human rights attorney with nearly four decades of experience, is founder and director of the Texas Civil Rights Project (“TCRP”). Harrington has handled landmark civil rights cases, written and published widely, and served on human rights delegations in different areas of the world. TCRP’s litigation docket is vast and diverse, including individual representation and impact litigation, damages and injunctive actions, and significant work promoting transparency through open records and freedom of information requests and lawsuits. Harrington has also taught at the University of Texas School of Law as an adjunct professor for twenty-six years. He graduated from the School of Law at the University of Detroit, from where he also holds a Masters in philosophy.

Susan N. Herman (Keynote Speaker) was elected President of the American Civil Liberties Union in October 2008, after having served on the ACLU National Board of Directors for twenty years, as a member of the Executive Committee for sixteen years, and as General Counsel for ten years. Herman holds a chair as Centennial Professor of Law at Brooklyn Law School, where she currently teaches courses in Constitutional Law and Criminal Procedure, and seminars on Law and Literature, and Terrorism and Civil Liberties. She writes extensively on constitutional and criminal procedure topics for scholarly and other publications, ranging from law reviews and books to periodicals and on-line publications. Her current book, Taking Liberties: The War on Terror and the Erosion of American Democracy, was published by Oxford University Press in October 2011. Herman has also participated in Supreme Court litigation, writing and collaborating on amicus curiae briefs for the ACLU on a range of constitutional criminal procedure issues. Herman received a B.A. from Barnard College and a J.D. from New York University School of Law. Before entering teaching, Professor Herman was Pro Se Law Clerk for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, and Staff Attorney and then Associate Director of Prisoners' Legal Services of New York.

Seth Kreimer is a Professor of Law at the University of Pennsylvania Law School. His scholarly agenda in constitutional law and civil rights has ranged from analysis of privacy of information, abortion regulation, assisted suicide, and gay marriage, to more recently examining the implications of the war on terror for civil rights and governmental transparency. Prior to joining the faculty at Penn, Kreimer was a civil rights litigator, and throughout his academic career Kreimer has continued to represent plaintiffs in a wide array of civil rights litigation, including Ferguson v. City of Charleston, a successful constitutional challenge before the U.S. Supreme Court to enforced drug testing of obstetrical patients, and Buck v. Stankovic, enjoining in Pennsylvania federal court the denial of a marriage license to a citizen who wished to marry an undocumented non-citizen. Kreimer graduated from Yale College and holds a J.D. from Yale Law School.

Jennifer Laurin joined the faculty of the University of Texas School of Law in 2009. Her principal research interests lie in the intersections of criminal and constitutional litigation, and regulation of criminal justice institutions. Before joining the UT faculty, Laurin spent several years as a litigation associate with the New York City civil rights firm of Neufeld Scheck & Brustin, LLP (formerly Cochran Neufeld & Scheck, LLP), litigating Section 1983 claims arising out of wrongful convictions in federal courts across the country. Prior to that she served as a law clerk to the Honorable Thomas Griesa of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York and the Honorable Guido Calabresi of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Laurin received her undergraduate degree in Politics from Earlham College and her J.D. from Columbia Law School.

Javier N. Maldonado is a lawyer in private practice in San Antonio, Texas who specializes in representing individuals in complex federal and state litigation in the areas of immigration, employment disputes, and civil rights. Maldonado began his career with the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, was subsequently employed as a trial attorney with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, and then became the executive director of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights of Texas where he litigated several class action and individual civil rights cases on behalf of immigrants. Maldonado earned his B.A. and J.D. from Columbia University, and served as a law clerk for the Honorable George P. Kazen of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas.

Rachel Meeropol is a staff attorney at The Center for Constitutional Rights ("CCR") where she works on prisoners' rights and First Amendment issues. Recent cases handled by Meeropol include Turkmen v. Ashcroft, a class action suit on behalf of Arab and Muslim men rounded up in immigration sweeps after 9/11, and representation of federal prisoners held in the Bureau of Prisons' secretive "communication management units" in Aref v. Holder. Meeropol has also co-edited and written two editions of the Jailhouse Lawyers Handbook, a do-it-yourself litigation manual for prisoners distributed free by CCR and the National Lawyers Guild, and was the contributing editor of America's Disappeared: Secret Imprisonment, Detainees, and the War on Terror, published in 2005 by Seven Stories Press. Meeropol completed her undergraduate degree at Wesleyan University in 1997, and graduated from New York University School of Law in 2002.

Ranjana Natarajan joined the faculty of the University of Texas School of Law in 2009, and directs the National Security Clinic. Her teaching, litigation, and research interests include national security detention and counter-terrorism surveillance and criminal enforcement. Before joining the UT faculty Natarajan litigated in the areas of national security, immigrant rights, and other civil rights issues with the ACLU of Southern California, the Immigrant Rights Clinic at New York University School of Law, and South Brooklyn Legal Services. Natarajan obtained her B.A. from the University of Texas at Austin, and her J.D. from Columbia Law School.

Jack Preis is an Associate Professor of Law at University of Richmond. He writes in the fields of judicial power and constitutional remedies and teaches classes on federal courts, civil rights litigation, civil procedure and judicial interpretation. Preis also has participated in pro bono litigation, including recently arguing before the U.S. Supreme Court on behalf of the plaintiff in Minnecci v. Pollard, a Bivens action against private prison officials. Before entering teaching Preis clerked for the Honorable Royce C. Lamberth on the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia and practiced general litigation for three years at Wilmer Cutler Pickering. He earned a B.S. from Cornell University and a J.D. from Vanderbilt University School of Law.

Alex Reinert is an Associate Professor of Law at the Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law, where he teaches Civil Procedure, Constitutional Law, Criminal Law, and a class on the rights of prisoners, and conducts research in the areas of constitutional law, civil procedure, and criminal law. Before joining Cardozo's faculty, Reinert litigated on behalf of plaintiffs in cases focused on prisoners' rights, employment discrimination, and disability rights at Koob & Magoolaghan. He argued before the U.S. Supreme Court in Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662 (2009), and has appeared on behalf of parties and amicus curiae in many civil rights cases. Reinert earned his J.D. from New York University School of Law, and clerked for the Honorable Harry T. Edwards on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and United States Supreme Court Justice Stephen G. Breyer.

Stephen I. Vladeck is a Professor of Law and the Associate Dean for Scholarship at American University Washington College of Law. His teaching and research focus on federal jurisdiction, constitutional law, national security law, and international criminal law. A nationally recognized expert on the role of the federal courts in the war on terrorism, he was part of the legal team that successfully challenged the Bush Administration's use of military tribunals at Guantánamo Bay, Cuba, in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. 557 (2006), and has co-authored amicus briefs in a host of other major lawsuits, many of which have challenged the U.S. government's surveillance and detention of terrorism suspects. Vladeck earned a B.A. from Amherst College, and a J.D. from Yale Law School.