Disease Prevention Research in Underserved
Populations (CHPR)

Presents

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL SUMMER RESEARCH INSTITUTE

June 15-17, 2009
The University of Texas at Austin
School of Nursing

The Summer Research Institute is designed for individuals who are interested in pursuing funding primarily from federal sources (for example NIH) to conduct research in health promotion and disease prevention in underserved populations (as defined in Healthy People 2010). Past participants have been junior and mid-level researchers from disciplines including nursing, psychology, social work, health education, pharmacy and other health-related areas.

INSTITUTE PROGRAM

The Eighth Summer Research Institute (SRI) at The University of Texas at Austin will include three days of participant-oriented instruction on the "how to" of obtaining funding to conduct health-promotion research.

A distinguished group of speakers and experienced researchers will provide attendees with first-hand insight. SRI facilitators will conduct participants through the ins and outs of developing a program of health promotion intervention research. Participants will learn how to plan a program of research, how to write successful proposals for funding one's research and how to manage the resubmission process. Opportunities for individual consultations with Institute speakers and CHPR Directors will be available.

Program details are available at CHPR's website:
